

Report on Data Analysis

Hidden Markov Models (HMM) are statistical models that can be used for pattern recognition. An HMM models a system as a series of states, with each state producing observations. Transitions between states are governed by probabilities, and each state has a probability distribution over the possible observations. HMMs are particularly known for their application in temporal pattern recognition such as speech, handwriting, and gesture recognition.

